OVERVIEW. The cross-cultural Conference Healthier Societies fostering Healthy Organizations: A Cross-cultural Perspective is a two-day interdisciplinary event organized by the University of Florence (Italy). The founding conference, held in 2017 and this is the third meeting. The main aim is to share contributions focusing on research, assessment, and interventions that will offer new or innovative perspectives to foster healthier societies also paying attention to healthy organizations within the public and private sectors. Cross-cultural studies and perspectives will further show-case the applications and implications of current efforts to create positive human ecosystems.

Psychology studies the influence of individuals', groups' and societal cultural beliefs, norms and values on illness, health, well-being and health care. Because of the many cultural and country differences so readily apparent in our world, it is important to understand cross-cultural differences in the early identification and prevention of those factors that undermine the psychological and physical health of individuals and larger society and concurrently engage in health promotion initiatives that will enhance the quality of life (Kazarian & Evans, 2001). Cross-cultural studies further contribute to the understanding of personality traits in health and positive psychology (Bowden, Saklofske, van de Vijver, Sudarshan, & Eysenck, 2016), as well as career readiness, choice and engagement (Cheung, Wan, Leong, & Mok, 2013; Fan, Cheung, Leong, & Cheung, 2014; Guichard, 2013; Savickas, 2011; Di Fabio & Blustein, 2016; Blustein, Kenny, Di Fabio, & Guichard, 2019). Different themes typical of occupational health psychology will be examined in a cross cultural perspective including: health and well-being (Burke, 2010; Peiró, Sora, & Caballer, A., 2012; Tetrick & Peiró, 2012;) both for workers and for the organizations (Boyatzis, 2015; Di Fabio, 2016, 2017; Di Fabio & Tsuda, 2018; Estreder, Rigotti, Tomás, & Ramos, 2019; Peiró & Tetrick, 2011; Ramos, Anderson, Peiró, & Zijlstra, 2018), occupational stress focusing on stressor-strain relationships (Chang & Baard, 2011), the role of stressors as harmful and threatening (distress) and/or as opportunities and challenges (eustress) in causing negative (burnout) and positive (engagement) effects (Kozusznik, Rodríguez, Peiró, 2012, 2015; Rodríguez, Kozusznik, & Peiró, 2013). Organizational health psychology (Chang & Spector, 2011) calls for a cross-cultural perspective that will contribute to both a preventive and positive framework (Kenny & Hage, 2009; Di Fabio & Kenny, 2016) across cultural contexts and ranging from developed to emerging economies (Raya & Panneerselvam, 2013). During the First International Cross-cultural Conference the Positive Cross-cultural Organizational Health Psychology (Di Fabio, 2017b, Di Fabio & Peiró, 2018; Di Fabio & Tsuda, 2018) was settled in a cross-cultural preventative perspective (Di Fabio, 2018; Di Fabio & Kenny, 2016; Di Fabio & Saklofske, 2019) with the contribution of the International Core-group.

TOPICS. This third International Conference on Healthier Societies fostering Healthy Organizations: A Cross-cultural Perspective continues this productive forum started in 2017 in Florence for discussing the fostering of healthy organizations that will in turn lead to healthier individuals and societies based on scientific evidence. Cultural factors will also be emphasized. These contributions will reflect five thematic areas:

- 1) new ways of conceptualizing how individuals interact with the environment/s in the context of healthy organizations and organizational relations (e.g., prosocial organizational behavior, organizational citizenship behavior, workplace civility, organizational justice, organizational emotional intelligence; leadership, intrapreneurship, entrepreneurship, acceptance of change; positive self and relational management model; positive relational management...);
- 2) the dark side of unhealthy organizations;
- 3) the relation between ethical, sustainable, benevolent, health-promoting leadership and healthy organizations, resulting in the best leadership for healthy organizations in the 21st century;
- 4) research on well-being, personality traits and individual differences, positive outcomes for healthier societies and healthy organizations;
- 5) evaluation of specific interventions to foster healthier societies and healthy organizations.

The Conference enriches the framework for the promotion of psychosocial and healthy well-being drawing on evidence-based descriptions of interpersonal relationships and positive enhancing infrastructures in the larger socio-organizational context/s.
